Minority government and Brexit has stalled reform in many areas of workplace regulation but not in pensions, where we are in a period of transformational change. When over ten million auto-enrolled savers are enabled to access their pensions dashboard easily on their phone screen a revolution really is in prospect. There is a growing focus on ESG investing for the long term, as well as increasing consolidation to reduce cost and risk. Along with better governance measures, is this a pensions framework that is future-fit?

This conference considers the many ways in which significant change is underway in how retirement benefits are structured, provided and developed - and how employers and trustees are encouraging financial inclusion and engagement.
Pensions transformation
Size, engagement, governance

This conference considers the forms pension schemes may take in future, new ways of communicating with members, how the regulatory landscape is changing and wider social implications.

Who should attend?
This conference will be relevant to finance directors, in-house lawyers, trustees, pensions managers and professionals, plus HR directors with responsibility for pensions.

Delegates will gain an insight into:
– developments in pension policy, regulation and enforcement
– engaging with and representing all members
– modernised governance and public expectations

Conference speakers

Guy Opperman MP
Guy was appointed to his role in 2017 following the last election. He has served as a Government Whip and has been MP for Hexham since 2010. He was a barrister and is also an amateur jockey.
